Two County Harbor Aim of Cong. Welch

A plan for the formation of a harbor development district on the bay frontage of San Francisco and San Mateo counties has been proposed by Congressman Richard J. Welch of San Francisco. The plan which the congressman hopes to bring before congress at the next session was briefly alluded to in his talk before the Redwood City Chamber of Commerle Monday.

Welch has announced that he will ask Congress to appropriate money for a survey of the channel from Hunters Point to Dumbarton Point as the first step in his plan for financing harbor improvements through district bonds rather than by state credit as at present.

"Many improvements are needed in our harbor," Welch said.

"We have long been afraid to submit state-wide bonds to the people, fearing that because of petty jealousies such bonds might be defeated.

"By creating a harbor district if San Francisco and San Mateo counties we would never have any difficulty raising money for improvements.

"In order to avoid any possibility of political control appointment of the harbor commissioners should remain with the governor."

Welch pointed out that "the very life of these two counties depends upon its harbor."

COUNTY TRIBES TO HOLD ANNUAL FOOTBALL MEET

On Saturday afternoon of this week, beginning at 2:30 o'clock the Y. M. C. A. "Friendly Indian Tribes" of the county will hold their annual football meet pow-wow at the Sequoia field. Tribes from all over the county are planning on having a good representation out for this affair.

The three Redwood tribes, the "Algonquins," "Sioux," and "Aztecs" will be the hosts.

The events which will be run off at the meet will be similar to those which were put on for the Pioneers at Berkeley several weeks ago in which the local Roosevelt Pioneer Club came out with the highest honors. Just the fine points of the game, punting for distance, drop kicking goal, forward passing for distance and accuracy will be the events.

The boys of the various tribes are practicing these in the hopes that their tribe may be able to win the "coup" which is awarded at each pow-wow.

RICE MEN AND MILLERS CLASH OVER STANDARDS

A battle between the rice millers and the rice growers with the State Department of Agriculture lined up on the side of the growers, is looming up on the farm horizon.

The discourteous if not beligerent treatment of Director G. H. Hecke at the meeting of the grain committee of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce last Friday where he had gone to talk over the grading and standardization of rice called for under the new standardization law, indicated the millers were ready to set up their grades against state standards.

The growers are more vitally intereted in the inspection and grading of brown and milled rice than are the millers, Hecke declared. It should be enforced by neutral agencies, is his opision, rather than by the millers isterested only in temporary market conditions.

SHORTAGE OF FARM LABOR MAY BE SOLVED

Predictions that the shortage of farm labor would lead to an amendment of the Federal Immigration Law at the next sessios of Congress to provide for the temporary importation of Mexican laborers, was made this week by John A. McGilvray, director of the Department of Industrial Relations

Mexican labor is used extensively in Imperial Valley, both in truck gardening and in the cotton fields, he reported. Many of these laborers have drifted in without legal sanction and when the border patrol began deporting those without passports it caused a labor shortage.

Following a personal investigation of the Wixon Plan, which was to issue an unofficial passport by which Mexicans were identified, McGilvray estimated that at least 7,000 of these laborers had been admitted.

Agitation for Oriental contract labor by the farmers of the Sacramento valley and Delta region was reported to the governor by the director of Industrial Relation. As a result of the agricultural labor situation, McGilvray recommended to Governor Young that the state labor employment bureaus devote their efforts to placement of agricultural laborers.

PLAN TO PROTECT CHILDREN

A sidewalk along the Woodside road to serve the needs of children going to and from the Washington school is planned by the trustees. The matter was brought before the board of trustees at the request of the South Redwood Development Association.

The deep ditches which parallel the Woodside road on each side make it necessary for pedestrians to use the roadway, and as a consequence they are in constant danger of being struck. Several accidents of this kind have happened and at least two deaths have resulted. The Improvement Association suggested that a board walk be erected along the west side of the road as a temporary expedient until such a time as the ditch on that side can be covered over and a cement side walk built.

After a short discussion of the matter it was referred to City Engineer Dimmitt, and he was asked to have estimates of both jobs ready for the next meeting of the board. Chief of Police Colsigns on the Woodsidt road, and the cost of erecting "go slow" signs on the Wodside road, and submit them to the board at its next regular meeting.

ANNUAL JUNIOR PLAY TO BE PRESENTED

Who hasn't met that amiable busy body of neighborhood society, who is always ready to air her opinion about the weather, present, past, and future? Her personal mail is always circulating about, her affairs are everybody else's and vice-versa. In short she is the village gossip.

The annual Junior class play to be presented at the Sequoia Union High School on Saturday, December 3rd has a very fair specimen of this type among the fifteen odd cast in "The Book of Charm." Of course there are others; the ambitous daughter with enough getup about her to want to get away from the little town to, "live and work," then heaving a romantic sigh, "to work and live;" the not too indulgent father and slightly hen-pecked husband of a high strung, nervous wife and mother of the would-be prodigy; yes, there is a villain and a hero and an honest-to-goodness fist fight between the two! Old "Doc" Garfield, employer of the hero and owner of the drug store where he sells carbonated water is another interesting old codger, furnishing many laughs.

Rehearsals for the event have been held daily, and this delightful comedy promises to be a good production. Under the title, "The Boy Friend," the play has been featured throughout the country as a motion picture film.

Tickets are selling at two prices 75c for the best reserved seats, 50c for the remainder. The public is urged to buy their tickets early in order to assure them of good seats.

Well-known Coast Man Dies in S. F.

George M. Havice, Sr., passed away at the Lane hospital,, San Francisco, Tuesday morning, November 15, 1927 .He had been ill for nearly eighteen months and in hospitals a larger part of the time. His body was cremated at Cypress Lawn and his ashes, in accordance with his expressed wish, will be at a later date be scattered over the hills of Montara. Many Montara and San Francisco friends attended the services. There were many beautiful flowers.

Mr. Havice has been a resident of Montara, San Mateo county, for the past twelve years, where he took an active interest in state and local affairs. He was president of the local chamber of commerce and was loved and respected by his neighbors.

After the Spanish-American War he became the superintendent of the government farm at Zamboanga in the Phillipine Islands, and formed friendships with such men as General Leonard Wood, Dr. David Barrows, Dean Worcester and others, that continued during his whole life.

In 1907 he became the manager of the Playa Vicente Rubber Plantation and Development Co. in the state of Vera Cruz, Mexico. He directed the planting of 700,000 trees and planted 3,000 acres to Para grass. He was a great success as a panter. He loved the soil, and it was due entirely to the various revolutions that his successful activities in Mexico were abandoned.

Mr. Havice was born in 1857 in Milroy, Pennsylvania. He was married in San Francisco to Jennie L. Wagner in the early eighties and leaves a son, George Havice, Jr., and two daughters, Marion L. Osborne and Hazel Bucklin.

CAR STOLEN HERE FOUND IN SAN JOSE

Clifton Woodhams of the San Mateo Title Company has one more thing to be thankful for. He has an automobile in his garage once more that he was not sure he would ever see again, at least all in one piece.

As the Woodhams were leaving the Cingregational church after the services last Sunday evening they saw two men drive away in their car. Woodhams chased the car on foot as far as the police station on Webster street, and then reported the theft to the police.

On Tuesday the stolen car was found parked in San Jose, where it had evidently been abandoned. The car was in apparently as good order as when it left here and nothing was taken.

Work on Second Bay Span to Begin Within 90 Days

Stating that actual building operations on the Coyote Point bridge across San Francisco bay will begin within three months, Arthur Batty, president of the San Francisco Toll Bridge Company, on Tuesday announced the issuance of a $4,500,000 bond issue. This, it is said, will be followed next week by the offering of $2,000,000 in debentures.

In announcing this move Batty is quoted in San Francisco on Tuesday:

"All stock, $1,000,000 of preferred and 120,000 shares of common, has been subscribed and will not be offered," Batty said. "Our engineers are in the city, our contractors are ready and work will begin in three months."

"We anticipate that it will take 18 months to construct the bridge.

The structure is to cost about $7,500,000, and will reach from Coyote Point, San Mateo county, to Mt. Eden, just west of Hayward and in line with Dublin canyon. It will be about half way between the Dumbarton bridge and the centrally located bridge site for which San Francisco is campaigning.

"The bridge will have five spans crossing the deep water channel, each 200 feet long. The center span will lift, providing a clearasce of 135 feet. At rest there will be a clearance of 35 feet for smaller craft.

"Except for these five stell spans, the bridge will be a concrete trestle, described by Batty as "being much superior to the Yolo causeway, near Sacramento."

"The bridge will be seven miles long an will have three roadways of nine feet each. Its total width will be 29 feet.

Several promoters already have held the franchise for the bridge but have not been able to finance it. In June, 1926, Batty became president of the new company.

In July, 1926, because of War Department objections to previous plans, a new franchise was granted for a bridge which met all objections of the military authorities.

Since then Batty and his associates have been working on financing and detailed plans for construction.

"And now we are ready to give the people of California a better and easier way of getting from the San Joaquin valley to San Francisco and the peninsula and from the centers of population to the cities of the valley," Batty said.

The Southern Pacific last week applied to the Railroad Commission for permission to abandon three trains on the line. They showed service is being given at a loss and can be given efficiently and economically by busses it will operate. No curtailing of through service from San Francisco to Lake Tahoe is contemplated, it was said.

Diamond prospecting is being undertaken on an extensive scale in Lake county, according to word received by mining interests in Sacramento. A super-highway between the San Francisco Bay region and Sacramento! Elimination of thirteen miles of driving by a shorter, safer, more direct route between cities of the metropolitan area and the state capital. This is the proposal of the California State Automobile Association conveyed to the State Highway Commission in a communication signed by H. J. Pe-nier, chairman of the Highways Committee of the association boar.. of directors.

The State Board of Barber Examiners, created by the last legislature, has just completed the licensing of 16,375 California tonsorial artists who have been practicing their profession for a sufficient length of time under terms of the new law to merit permits without examination. License No. 1 was issued to Daniel F. Tattenham of San Francisco, secretary of the State Federation of Barbers.

Announcement that the sum of $23,500,000 will be expended upon California highways in new construction and maintenance during 1928 is made at Sacramento by B. B. Meek, director of the State department of public works. A total of $7,500,000 will be available next year from the additional one cent gasoline tax. This money now is being allocated. Of the total sum, $13,000,000 will be derived from budget allowances and the 2-cent gas tax receipts for reconstruction and maintenance, and in addition there will be $3,000,000 in federal aid repayments. All of the balance will come from the additional 1-cent gasoline tax.

Bids have been called on the new animal science building which will be erected on the campus at the College of Agriculture. The legislature appropriated $300,000 for the structure. The bids will be opened on November 25th, and it is expected that the various committees will have completed their work so that the contract will be awarded at the meeting of the regents at their regular meeting on the second Tuesday in December. It will require about eight months to complete the building after it is begun.

The Pacific Gas and Electric Company operates a street car system in Sacramento, its only utility of the kind. To placate the natural hunting instincts of its motormen, the company awards gold stars for not hitting pedestrians. Indicative of the dullness of a motorman's life in Sacramento is the fact that three galloping street-car chauffeurs have just drawn the medals for cruising 80,000 miles without a single pedestrian notch in their fenders.

California's lucky numbers, revealed for the first time last week, are numerals ending in 2, 5, 8 and 0. Records of the state Bureau of Vital Statistics show that a large proportion of Californians give their ages as ending in one of the four whenever they are called upon to fill out a public document. A woman is seldom 31, for instance, her age, if she is in the early 30s, will in every likelihood be announced as either 30 or 32. The records for marriages, deaths and all other events involving the statement of ages show a deposition by both men and women to fib a little, according to State statisticians. And, curiously enough, this mild fibbing runs invariably to the figures 2, 5, 8, and zero.

Inspection of all California busses and all other motor vehicles carrying children to and from school was ordered by the State Division of Motor Vehicle last week in a campaign to force operators of such machines to employ adequate safety equipment.

The Division of Motor Vehicles announced last week and also stated that 65,243 automobile owners were stopped on the matter of headlights during the same period.

The state board of health has turned Pied Piper on an elaborate scale to trim the $8,000,000 annual board bill of some 5,000,000 rats in California. If that is firing seven-digit numbers too fast for the average person, the health authorities compute that it costs at least one-half cent a day to satisfy the appetite of the average rodent. They also estimate there is at least one rat to every person in the state. And so they figure that each rat among the total population of 5,000,000 or so is devouring foodstuffs each year in the value of $1.82.

Asserting the policy of securing homes for eligible war veterans as rapidly as possible, the tSate Veterans' Welfare Board last week announced that $533,000 in loans under the farm and home purchase act will be advanced to 111 former service men this week. The board, according to Secretary George M. Stout, is helping veterans to obtain homes at the rate of nearly $1,000,000 worth of property a month.

California motorists paid $4,518,069 to the Federal government in war tax on new cars purchased in this state during the twelve months ending August 31 last. This figure was made public recently by State Senator Arthur H. Breed, chairman of the legislation committee of the California State Automobile Association, in connection with the association's campaign to secure the support of western congressmen for the repeal of the three per cent levy on the factory price of automobiles. The association is leading the western front of the nation-wide battle being waged by the American Automobile Association and its 943 affiliated clubs against the Treasury department proposal that the war tax be continued as a permanent peace-time levy.

Loss of timber and watershed cover represented a smaller proportion of total California fire damages during the 1927 dry season than during any other season in the last five years, it was estimated by State Forester M. B. Pratt. Though complete figures are not yet available, the loss of timber through fire in areas protected by State forestry agencies has been exceptionally low for the period of hazard just ended. More rangers will be retained on slash disposal duty this winter than in any previous year, the forester announced. A general clean-up of debris and slash along highways is contemplated, he said.

Mapping plans under which corps of trained inspectors are to operate in San Francisco and Los Angeles and the principal cities of the State, former Senator Frank H. Benson, chief of the new State Division of Narcotic Law Enforcement, declared last week that his bureau intends to wage an intensive campaign against the ringleaders of the "dope" traffic.

Crippled children of needy families of California, who otherwise might be forced to carry their handicap through life, may now receive treatment free by the counties in which they reside under provisions of the Crippled Child Act, adopted by the last legislature. Administration of this act has been placed within the jurisdiction of the State Department of Public Health, and announcement was made last week by the department that immediate aid may now be secured.

Assignment of Company A, 184th infantry, California national guard, to Napa, was announced last week by Adj. Gen. R. E. Mittelstaedt. The unit recently was mustered out at Merced because of laxity in drill and care of equipment. Napa won the company by virtue of its priority over 43 other cities and by virtue of its making provision for excellent armory facilities. Tulare was also seeking the assignment of the company.

Plans for the reconstruction of the Chico State Teachers' College, destroyed by fire last Summer, on a twenty-five-year expansion program to accommodate, ultimately, 3000 students, were tentatively decided upon last week by a special committee of members of the State Board of Education, after an inspection of the site had been made. The report of this committee is to be submitted to the State board in session here January 3rd, and if it is adopted the department of education will then ask the State department of finance for an appropriation from the emergency building fund in the sum of $227,000 for the construction of the first unit.

Impetus youth, which wants to do everything in a hurry, apparently doesn't think much of California's new "gin marriage" law requiring prospective brides and swains to file a three-day wedding intention notice before getting the necessary license. For, while Reno, Medford, Yuma and other border cities in neighboring States where licenses may be secured for the asking are hanging up new knotting records, California's weddings dropped off 2986 during the months of August and September as compared with a similar period in 1926. And it's getting worse and worse. In August, the first full month after the law became effective, 4074 couples went to the altar or the justices of the peace. That was a drop of 937 from August, 1926. Now comes along September with only a total of 3477 weddings in the State—a decrease of 2049 from the corresponding month in the previous year. And early returns for October now filtering in indicate a new low record altogether.

Study of water problems in the delta regions and the San Joaquin Valley will be undertaken by the joint legislative water investigation committee, December 5 to 9, according to an itinerary announced last week by the State Department of Public Works.

At least 19,000 deer have been killed in California during the present season. Hunters who have killed the most deer have done so in the counties in which they live, according to figures of B. D. Marx Greene, executive officer of the department of natural resources of the Fish and Game Commission of the State.

Although California ranks sixth in population among the States, it stands third in percapita financial development, according to figures made public last week by Will C. Wood, superintendent of banks. Only New York and Pennsylvania exceed it. California's banks have a total capital, surplus and undivided profit of $368,749,000, according to Wood, a sum greater than the combined total for the nine western States of North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico and Oklahoma.

Assisting Bids

After a no trump by dealer and a pass by second hand (3).

Bidding over partner's unopposed no trump is called a take-out and is undoubtedly the subject upon which experts and authors show the greatest divergence of opinion.

Inasmuch as a good five-card major suit bid is considered safer than a no trump and more likely to produce game if the hand contains a worthless minor doubleton, practically all authorities agree that a take-out should be made under these circumstances when holding a five-card major suit as good as an original bid. If the hand contains a worthless singleton, the take-out should be made with a major suit of slightly less strength—namely, as good as a defensive bid. This is called a strength take-out and is made with the belief that the two hands will net a better score played with this major suit for trump than they would if played at no trump.

If third hand holds six of a major suit it is also fair to suppose that better results would be obtained by having that suit for trump than by playing a no trump, therefore take-out partner's no trump with any six-card major suit. A major suit take-out then shows strength or great length.

When it comes to a minor suit, some authorities advise taking-out with a long minor suit and a trickless hand (sometimes called a "bust"). This take-out is called a "rescue" and the number of cards which different authorities claim necessary for its use varies from five to seven. The six or seven-card minor suit worthless hand surely should be bid over partner's unopposed no trump. Since the underlying reason for this is the belief that the hands will produce a better score so played than if no trump, there is no reason to call it a rescue. It should simply be understood that a minor take-out means length and not strength. One possible exception to this statement is that when void of a suit or holding a singleton, a take-out should be made with a five-card minor suit, provided it is good as a defensive bid.

If length and unusual strength are both represented in a minor suit with eight probable tricks, the take-out should be by a bid of three. This identifies it as a strength take-out, and indicates your belief that with this suit as trump and your partner's no trump hand, you can make game.

A take-out should be made on any seven-card suit, major or minor, strong or weak.

A take-out also should be made when holding any two suits of five or more cards each, called a two-suiter. The higher valued of the two suits should be bid.

(4) After a no trump bid by dealer and an overbid by second hand.

Second hand's overbid usually will be in a suit, and in this situation third hand's holdings must meet two requirements for him to be able to raise his partner's no trump. First, he must have four assisting probable tricks. But more important than this is the second requirement: he must have a stopper for the suit just bid by the adversary. This is a universal convention which always should be observed. If third hand raises dealer's no trump after an intervening suit bid, dealer must be able to be sure that his partner has a stopper for that suit. In case third hand does not have a stopper for opponent's suit, but has four or five probable tricks to assist his partner's no trump, he should make a suit bid if holding a suit of four or five cards with Aces or any two other honors.

Examples—Dealer bids one no trump, second hand bids two spades. Third hand, with the following holdings, should:

(1) S—K, J, x; H—K, x x; D—x x x x; C—A, x x; bid two no trump.

(2) S—A, J, x; H—K, Q, x; D—x x x x; C—K, x x; bid two no trump.

(3) S—xx; H—K, Q, x x; D—x x x x; C—A, x x; bid three hearts.

(4) S—x x x; H—K, Q, x; D—x x x x; C—K, x x; pass.

(5) After any bid by dealer has been doubled by second hand.

If, in this situation, third hand holds a decidedly good assisting hand, he should raise his partner's bid, but with only moderate help, he should pass because he is sure of obtaining another chance to bid, and will at that time have more information upon which to base his declaration.

Probable Age of Man Put at 250,000 Years

The periods of the geological time, as adopted by the international geological congress, are as follows: Cenozoic, the age of mammals, began approximately 40,000,000 years ago and extends to the present time; Mesozoic, the age of reptiles, about 140,000,000 years ago; Paleozoic, which includes the Silurian and Carboniferous periods, began about 300,000,000 years ago. Scientists generally believe that man existed at the end of the glacial period. The earliest appearance of actual man, the genus homo, occurred probably 250,000 years ago, this estimate being based on the antiquity of the Heidelberg man, the oldest known type.—Washington Star.

Virtues Underestimated

Usefulness and happiness are true measures of success. They are within the reach of every man. Indeed, they generally can be had for the taking. Because of this, perhaps, they are too frequently underestimated, especially by the ambitious.—Grit.

Thanksgiving Day

THE caption immediately brings to the mind the thought of a table loaded with many delicacies amidst which a golden brown turkey, stuffed with highly flavored dressing, reigns supreme, nor are the many pumpkins that will be made into pies with which to end a perfect meal forgotten. It also brings visions to some of another morning that the alarm clock will not rudely interrupt pleasant dreams, to the huntsman an opportunity for a day in the woods in the woods in pursuit of game, to others "just another day."

It is wondered if the original intent, that it should be a day set aside to give thanks for the many blessings of the year, has not been minimized and overlooked in satiating the desire for pleasure—the god at whose shrine so many worship.

Those few pioneers of the wilderness, who in the fall of 1621 were the first to celebrate this day, were thankful that they had been allowed to live, that the harvest was such as to sustain them through the winter, and for a fair possibility of continued exstence. Though provded with only the bare necessities of life and surrounded on every side by seemingly unconquerable difficulties and hardships, yet they gave thanks.

It is doubtful if the most visionary among them would have prophesied that in a few centuries cities, containing buildings many times higher than the highest of the trees, would have taken the place of the forests which hid the hostile Indians; that self-propelled machines would climb over hills on concrete roads at a faster rate of speed that the deer that traveled the wooded paths that even the air would be conquered and man rival the eagle in his flights, or that they would be remembered as the pioneers of the world's most prosperous nation.

Today, their descendants, living amongst circumstances that would have seemed to them as Utopian, possesd of conveniences and luxuries that in the wildest dreams of fancy they would not have hoped for, should not forget that for these blessings they are indebted to the Grand Architect of the Universe and that yesterday, November 24th they should have emphasized their thanks and not their pleasures.

International Road to Link Continents

THE proposed International Highway which is being urged so much, and the idea of which is said to appeal to President Coolidge, will make it possible for California to motor over paved roads through Mexico, Central America, along the west coast of South America to Puerto Montt, which is south of Valparaiso, then across the across the southern part of Argentina road down the east coast to Cape Horn. Or at Valparaiso, the tourist can take a bee-line east for Buenos Aires. Rio de Janeiro can be reached northeast from Buenos Aires.

As far as length goes, the highway, if ever completed, will be the longest in the world. Scenic grandeur along the way is said to be unsurpassable, according to the National Automobile Club.

The official starting point will be somewhere up in Maine. The route will lead through the U. S. down to Laredo, Texas, and there, or perhaps at Mexico City, is where California motorists will drive on to the main road on their journey to Cape Horn.

Such a highway would not only furnish quick and easy trahsportation between continents, but would do much to encourage friendship and intercommunication between the nations of the western world. Here with vast stretches of undeveloped country, and a civilization awaiting the constructive touch of international commerce and understanding, is the opportunity for the greatest assemblage of states in the history of the world.

International roads, international telephone connections, everything, in fact, that will broaden our national and individual outlook are of advantage far beyond the convenience they offer. These are links in the chain which, we hope, will some day, bind the nations of the world together in a union as strong, as free and as free from individual envy and ambition as that which today binds the several states of our nation into a single powerful unit.

REDWOOD MATERIALS PLANT ENDANGERED BY FLAMES

A fire which resulted in the boiling over of a large cauldron of road oil and its subsequent ignition almost resulted in the destruction of the warehouse of the Redwood Materials Company Wednesday. The road oil was being heated in one of the portable heating units used in road repair work. When it boiled over on the ground and caught fire from the fire in the heater, the flames spread rapidly, and one end of the frame building used as a storage shed or warehouse was slightly burned. The building was saved by the prompt action of the fire department.

THE WORST IS YET TO COME — Wellington

ROAD ALLOTMENT DIVISION PROTESTED BY FRESNO COUNTY

By CLEM WHITAKER

SACRAMENTO—Nov. 22—Division of the highway "pork barrel," as the politicians are wont to call it, promises to stir up somewhat of a rumpus, if indications of the current week may be taken as a criterion.

On the heels of a declaration by Bert Meek, director of the State Department of Public Worns, that he proposes to build roads where state engineers and his department feel they are most vital and disregard community petitions for local projects, the Fresno Civic Association has submitted a statement to Governor Young charging unfair distribution of road funds among the various counties.

The Fresno complaint deals with the aportionment of highway projects up until July 1926, and is not a slap at the present state administration, but does contain a hint that Fresno, at least is preparing to fight for a bigger share of the road money in the future.

The association singles out Humboldt, Mendociso, Del Norte, Shasta, Siskiyou and Tehama counties as the sections that have been favored with larger highway isvestments than their popuation, wealth or motor vehicle registration justify. These counties, it is submitted, have received $18,102,823 under the present highway program.

Los Angeles, San Diego and other southern counties are not mestioned in the Civic Associatios analysis, but there are reports that the south will be drawn into the road costroversy.

Humboldt county's cut in the highway fund up until July, 1926, totaled $4,510,064, it is charged, as against $919,279 spent in Marin county during the same period; $1,977,455 expended in San Mateo county; $2,125,829 in populous Santa Clar acounty; $1,626,415 in Plecer county; $473,442 in Glenn county; $829,063 in Colusa county; $629,074 in Lassen county; $685,577 in Stanislaus county; $1,276,135 in Solano county.

And Humbollt's shart, says the Fresno association, has been three and half times greater than Fresno's apportionment, although Fresno has more than four times the automobile registration and nearly four times the assessed valuation.

Little Del Norte county, it is set forth, has received state road projects totaling $2,400,514, or more than San Joaquin, Plumas, San Francisco, Alpine, Sierra and Sacramento combined.

Mendocino has enjoyed a state highway outlay of $3,453,645.

Shasta, Siskiyou and Tehama, the other "favored" counties mentioned in the analysis, have benefitted by state road investments under the present program, aggregating $3,386,570, $2,282,995 and $2,069,035, respectively.

Here's one of the comparisons that the Fresno Association submitted: Humboldt, Mendocino, and Del Norte, three of the smallest counties in the state in population, have secured more road work than the following 20 counties combined: Contra Costa, Sacramento, San Joaquin, San Francisco, Lake Tuolumne, El Dorado, San Benito, Plumas, Sutter, Glenn, Napa Santa Cruz, Kings, Stanislaus, Madera, Lassen, Colusa, Alpine, Sierra.

Merced county has apparently shared fairly well in the splitting of the highway melon, getting jobs calling for an expenditure of $2,012,660, or considerably more than three times the sum spent in Stanislaus during the same period.

As there will be approximately $120,000,000 raised for highway purposes during the coming ten years, the controversy promises to be a lively one. The southern counties are assured, under the law, of an even break with the north, but the question is which counties?

HARBOR DEVELOPMENT COUNTY'S GREATEST NEED

Stating that the greatest need of San Mateo county today is an adequatt development of the harbor possibilities on its eastern coast, Congressman Richard Welch of San Francico addressed the members of the Redwood City Chamber of Commerce last Monday. The development of the harbor possibilities and the industrial centers which will follow such develop ment, Welch stated, are absolutely necessary if this county is to keep pace with the other counties of the state.

Mayor Henry Beeger of this city acted as chairman of the meeting, and introduced Congressman Welch. Justice of the Peace Edward McAuliffe also spoke before the chamber of commerce upon the subjects of bad checks and burglaries. McAuliffe urged the merchants to notify the police immediately if any suspicious strangers endeavored to cash checks.

Let's Do Our Best!

by O. Lawrence Hawthorne

"I don't see why it had to be Exactly right," he said to me.
"I did about the best I could!
Perhaps it wasn't very good,
But I was anxious to get done."
And then I answered, "Listen, Son!—

"Some days it seems a waste of time
To work so long to make a rhyme,
Or find a word that will convey
Exactly what I wish to say.
Sometimes I sit and wonder, too,
If something 'almost right' will do.

"Perhaps no one would ever note
The careless way in which I wrote.
But if we fail to do our best—
No matter what may be the test—
We lose a satisfaction, Son,
That in no other way is won!

"To do 'about the best' you can
Will not make you the sort of man
I'm sure that you would like to be.
So, when you do a task for me,
To have you stick and see it through
Means much to me—but more to you!"

San Mateo County 'Chokes' Gain in Eastern Favor

By ESTO BROUGHTON

SACRAMENTO, Nov. 22 — Is America just entering her "salad" days?

The increasingly large number of orders G. H. Hecke, state director of agriculture, reported today were pouring in to the truck gardens of California, indicate either that American have "gone" vegetarian or that they prefer our sun-kist tomatoes and delta potatoes to Long Island spuds and New England culls.

Eastern tables are "green" with California lettuce, asparagus and artichokes, the agricultural expert declared. In fact, San Mateo Santa Cruz, and Santa Clara counties supply practically all the "chokes" which have defeated so many socially east of the Rockies but are taken as a casual source of green vitamins "out west."

The price of the vegetable 'menu' grown in California wil ltotal approximately $65,000,000 for this year, Hecke asserted.

This is merely the bill for "green grocery" shipments and does not include "home" consumption, the director stated.

When the carload shipments are finally checked up for the year, the aggregate vegetable shipments will total more than those of grapes and deciduous fruits combined, according to the estimate made by the agricultural chief on the basis of carload lots dispatched to-date. For 1926 this represented approximately 83,000 cars comprized of 63,000 carloads of grapes and 20,000 of deciduous fruits.

"California's popularity in the vegetable market has been gained by the superior quality of our products," Hecke said. "Our vegetables are larger and more attractive looking, reach the markets in good cosdition and have a better flavor."

"From Merced and Stanislaus counties, as well as Imperial and San Diego, lettuce and other vegetables can be shipped in the winter time and more than compete with hot-house grown varieties in many bound localities," the director stated.

Gas keeps your city clean

A clean fuel means sunnier, brighter days

People who use gas fuel help keep their city clean.

For gas gives off no smoke or by-products that hide the sun's rays. The air remains pure. The sun shines brightly.

And why is gas so clean?

Because we "launder" the gas before it's sent to you. The gas goes through purifiers. It is cleaned in mechanical "scrubbers." Only pure gas that burns clean passes into the pipes that lead to your home. And gas is all fuel.

For cleaner, sunnier and healthier cities use gas for cooking, water heating and house heating.

Pathos in Survival of Colonial Remnant

About a half acre of colonia. New York survives on the west bank of the Harlem river, just north of the University Heights bridge that connects West Fordham road with West Two Hundred and Seventh street. A long, low house covers a goodly portion of this plot that smacks so obviously of a more roomy past. The dwelling droops wearily as if under its staggering weight of years. It was erected when the Harlem was a picturesque stream with some pretense to scenic attractions.

The loneliness of this colonial survival is emphasized by the present commercial and industrial character of the locality as a whole. The river is lined at this point by brickyards, coal pockets and other similar effects not connected with exclusive society. The trim little craft that can be pictured as once pausing at the landing below the house have been supplanted by squat scows, riding low beneath the burdens of rugged merchandise, that ferry to and from the yards. The silence of the section, that was once broken only by the natural notes of birds and insects, is now shattered by the snorts of straining tugboats and the clamorous horns of motor cars.—New York Times.

Musical Genius Gave Piano to the World

Johann Sebastian Bach, one of the greatest of musical geniuses, was at one time a piano tuner, and it was through his efforts that music reached its present range, a writer in the Kansas City Star informs us. Before Bach's time musicians had only a limited number of keys in which to write music, as they could not time their instruments to other keys, and as a result all music written prior to 1700 is very much alike in tune. Bach labored ceaselessly on the harpsichord, forerunner of the piano, until he discovered the lost notes hidden in the strings. Then he began to write music in keys hitherto unknown to his compatriots. At first they did not take kindly to his variations of chords and intermixing of many strange sounds and called him a musical fanatic. Later, however, Mozart, upon hearing one of Bach's pieces, exclaimed: "Thank Heaven! here at last is something new that I can learn from." Then followed such great masters as Chopin, Schumann, Liszt and Rubenstein who adored and played Bach.

Mountain Elevator

The great "lift" to carry aspiring tourists who would eschew the combined joys and labors of the mountain climber to the top of the rugged Wetterhorn, in Switzerland, is one of the most interesting devices in the world.

It goes up by two stages, each about 2,000 feet high. The passenger cages are lifted by a drum-wound rope and guided by two pairs of steel cables, each about an inch and three-quarters in diameter, and possessing a tensile strength of 330 tons, 10 times the maximum put upon them. The cars are attached to these cables in such a manner as to avert a fall in case of the breaking of one of the lifting ropes. The cars, weighing 5½ tons, and carrying 20 passengers apiece, are lifted vertically at a speed of about five feet a second.

Sign of the Cross

One of the astonishing sights to the average American tourist in Europe, is the frequent sight which can be had in very small villages of wealthy and massive churches. I can think of several English hamlets which have churches that American cities might be glad to call cathedrals. On an automobile trip to Paris recently, it was true in several places. At Bonny, for example, I noticed a fine gray ancient church, which would have looked in its proper setting in Chicago or Boston. How could such a small village have a million-dollar edifice? I suppose the local nobility in older days were largely responsible. It had also a fine marble statue of Joan of Arc.—Detroit Free Press.

One "Bad Egg"

A school teacher relates that she was giving her small pupils a lesson on birds, and after telling about the hatching of the eggs, the care of the mother bird and the first lessons in flying, she said: "Now, children, I am the mother bird and you are the little birds nestled in your cozy nest. I want you all to spread your wings and fly away." Each child, waving arms to the music she beat, skipped to the dressing room, with the exception of one little fellow who remained motionless in his seat. Turning to him, she said: "Donald, why didn't you fly away with all the other little birds?" "'Cause," came the prompt and unexpected reply, "'Cause I was a bad egg."—Boston Transcript.

Ancient Iron Mine

The United States bureau of mines says that the Cornwall Iron Mountain ore banks, near Lebanon, Pa., have been in operation since about 1740. This is an open-pit operation, and it is mined by steam shovels. There are numerous pit mines in Lake Superior districts. Two of the large ore pits are the Hull-Rust, at Hibbing, Minn., which produces more ore in a year than the Cornwall pit; also the Mahoning pit, which produces more, and adjoins the Hull-Rust pit. The Hull-Rust and Mahoning pits give hematite ore, while the Cornwall pit gives magnetite.

HI SCHOOL INSTALLS STATION

A 50-watt transmitting set, operating on 20 and 40 meter bands and remotely controlled by a relay system, has been installed in the tower of Sequoia Union High School for use of the Radio Physics Club.

The two licensed operators, Morton Brewer and Robert Barnes, have sent and received messages from all parts of the United States, but the farthest they have reached is Southern Argentina They have heard stations from the region of Australia and New Zealand, but have not been able to get direct communication with them.

The transmitter was formerly in the physics laboratory, and the receiver is in one of the store rooms there. Only a short wave length can be worked and the operator works from a distance.

Many times personal messages of deaths are received here and the operators relay them to other stations which they think will be interested. They also communicate with other schools' operators.

A class in code is being held on Tuesday and Thursday evenings open to the Radio-Physics Club only. The code is worked at noon at school.

During the current year several students are expected to apply for operating licenses.

County Road Plan Seen as Financial Soulution

The adoption of a plan of road construction by the coutny fair to all parts of the county and which would insure the construction of the main arteries through the county without an unusual burden to any property owner, is the solution for the question of financing the proposed construction of the Alameda de las Pulgas by District Attorney Swart.

Swart was among the many who protested at the meeting of the board of supervisors Monday against the construction of this highway under an assessment district plan. Swart urged the classification of all county roads into two groups. The first group he suggested to be the primary roads and to be constructed by the state and county. Other roads would be classified as local and be paid for by local assessment.

Another protest against the construction of the Alameda de las Pulgas by an assessment district was that of Attorney Gilbert Farrell of Burlingame. Farrell likened to the proposed foothill road to the aayshore highway. It is a road destined to become a link in the main highway system from San Frascisco, he stated, and should be built by the state and county. "Why," he asked, "Should a few property owners be taxed for twenty years to build a road for San Francisco motorists?"

The matter was finally laid over until Monday, when the board will mean to consider recommendations of the district attorney as to the advantages of a county plan of road construction.

Modesty Brings Salary Boost

MODEST Wiley Moore!

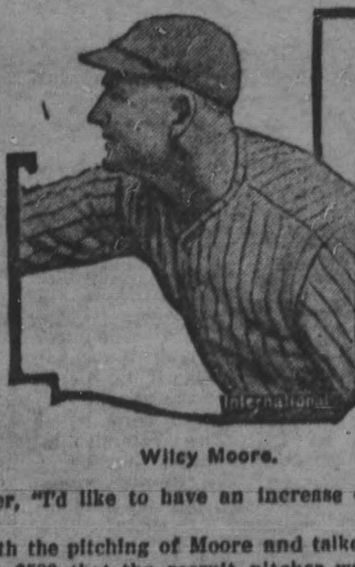
Wiley Moore, the Oklahoma farmer, who pitched the Yankees to their final world's series victory over the Pirates, was purchased from the Greenville club of the South Atlantic league last season for a moderate sum.

The big farmer boy captured the Sally league pennant for the Greenville club by winning 30 games and losing only four. The big league scouts passed him up because he was too old—he's over thirty now.

But Ed Barrow, business manager of the Yanks, thought that any pitcher who could win 30 games in a season was entitled to a job with the Yankees, writes William Hennigan in the New York World. So Moore was bought by New York.

He received a contract from the Yankees this spring. The contract read that he was to receive a salary of $2,500 and $3,000 if he remained with the team during the season.

Moore was used mostly as a relief pitcher in the early part of the season and saved more than one ball game for the Yankees. Then he drew his regular turn on the mound.



Wilcy Moore.

Two months before the season closed, Moore dragged himself over to Huggins, who was sitting peacefully on the Yankees' bench at the stadium.

He stood there for a minute or two and then finally said in his farmer-like way:

"Mr. Huggins, do you think that Colonel Ruppert would be mad if I asked him for a $500 increase?"

"I don't think so," said the Yankee manager. "Why don't you go up to the office after the game?"

Moore finally reached the office after the game and talked to Eddie Barrow, business manager of the club.

"Mr. Barrow," began the pitcher, "I'd like to have an increase of $500 in my contract."

Barrow was well acquainted with the pitching of Moore and talked to Colonel Ruppert about the extra $500 that the recruit pitcher was seeking.

Did Wiley get his $500?

The old contract that Moore had was torn up and a new one calling for a salary of $5,000 was presented to him to sign.

MONTANA COACH SOLE DIRECTOR

Ott Romney of State University Plays Lone Hand.

Coach Ott Romney of Montana State university is one of the few remaining "lone hand" athletic instructors in America.

Romney likes to give everything his personal attention and as a result directs four sports at Montana—football, basket ball, track and baseball. He has some assistant coaches but directs and holds himself personally responsible for his school's showing in all competition.

In addition to the work already outlined, Romney attends to the executive duties connected with being director of the department of physical education. He also is assistant dean of men, president of the Bozeman Service club and finds time to deliver addresses on athletics throughout the Northwest.

Romney graduated from Montana State in 1917 and then took a year's work at Utah university. At Montana State he won letters in football, basket ball, baseball, track and tennis and, to round the whole thing out, he was a member of the university debating team.

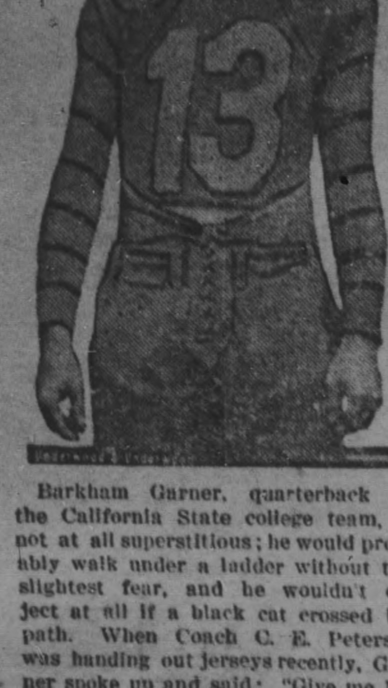
After some high school experience, Romney returned to Montana at a time when his alma mater was doing poorly in an athletic way. That was in 1923 and the teams were not making much of a showing in the Rocky Mountain conference. In the last four years and a half the Bobcats have forged rapidly to the front.

A canceled game kept Montana from qualifying for the conference championship last season in football, as it did not lose a contest. The basket ball team won the conference championship last winter after a hard fight.

His First Touchdown

Capt. Bob Reitsch of the University of Illinois football team, playing his eighth year as center, scored his first touchdown recently when he intercepted a freshman pass and ran ten yards. Bob was the best pilot in the Big Seven when he captained Rockford high and was the best center in the Big Ten last season.

Not Superstitious



Barkham Garner, quarterback of the California State college team, is not at all superstitious; he would probably walk under a ladder without the slightest fear, and he wouldn't object at all if a black cat crossed his path. When Coach C. E. Peterson was handing out jerseys recently, Garner spoke up and said: "Give me No. 13, coach, if you don't mind." He has played in No. 13 in high school and on two college teams. "It's my lucky number, and I want to be lucky this fall," he said.

Publicity for Ruth

"Babe" Ruth is the highest-paid ball player in the world, and has received more publicity than any other half dozen ball players. It may be that his attitude toward baseball has much to do with his success. Many baseball followers rate the Bambino the greatest hustler in the game. The day before the series started in Pittsburgh Ruth was the first Yankee on the diamond and the last to leave. He throws all his great strength into the battles.

Old-Fashioned Football Game Is Thing of Past

Hard, straight football of the old-fashioned type is disappearing and trickery is taking its place, in the opinion of Dewey Graham, Norwich university gridiron coach.

He believes that the new rules are responsible for less interesting football for the spectators, a loss of the body contact element and inferior play in several phases of the game.

"The game is more or a puzzle than a pleasure for the spectators," Graham complains. "Penalties inflicted in former years were nearly all understood by the spectators, but this year there are numerous weird rules calling for penalties that are entirely unknown to the average fan.

"The new rules tend to distract attention of players from the game. Too much is being left to the judgment of officials. Good officials are few. A great many games will be unjustly won or lost by decision of a referee, umpire or head linesman, rather than an opponent's errors or luck. The players had enough rules under the old system."

Porto Rico Has Joined National Boxing Body

The Porto Rico boxing commission has become affiliated with the National Boxing association and will regulate the sport in that country according to the regulations of the parent body, Thomas Donahue, president of the National Boxing association, announces.

Addi[illegible]n of Porto [illegible]ico to the N. B. A. swells the total of foreign members to four in addition to France, which has a working agreement with the association, Canada, Mexico and Cuba complete the roll that includes the boxing associations of 24 states in this country.

Porto Rico was represented in the association for the first time at the opening of the annual three-day N. B. A. convention in Toledo, Ohio.

President Donahue also announced that Billy Kennedy, New Orleans lightweight, had been suspended indefinitely by the association for failure to fulfill a contract to fight at New Haven, Conn.

Home Runs Popular

The popularity of the home run in baseball has aroused the Boston Braves to a greater need for them at Braves field. The wide-open spaces of the park have reduced the number of circuit hits to a minimum far below that of any other park. The reason that 3,500 added seats are being put in the outfield, then, is not because the seats are needed, but because they cut down the dimensions of the playing field to that of the average park.

From the open door two slit-like eyes in a face black with menace glittered over a rifle barrel held loosely, shoulder high. In undershirt and socks, his waist belted in bandages, stood Etienne Savanne, skinning knife dangling from a wrist thong, at the summons of his chief.

"Hand' up! Queek!"

His eyes shifting in doubt from the savage features of Savanne to the man still kneeling, dazed, beside the body, Farrel demanded: "What's this? A hold-up?"

"It's all right, Etienne. Drop your gun," ordered Guthrie in a tired voice, getting to his feet. "There's no trouble here."

"Oh, yes, there is!" objected Rawdon, recovering his nerve. "What d'you mean, Major Guthrie, by secreting a man wanted for murder? There's some real trouble ahead for you, as an accessory!"

"Shut up, Rawdon!" snapped Farrel. "I'm in command here." And the older man fumbled in an inside pocket and produced an oilskin envelope.

Numb with bitterness, Guthrie, aided by Etienne, carried the shell of Craig Galbraith into the bedroom littered with the debris of his unconscious frenzy.

"Come here, will you, Guthrie?" called Farrel, who held a photograph in his hand.

"Is that Laughing McDonald?"

Guthrie apathetically took the photograph and went to the lamp. It was the likeness of a large man in Canadian uniform, the patched face hopelessly disfigured by wounds. As he looked at the Canadian soldier, into the listless eyes of the man who had given his all for friendship, and in vain, crept a doubt—perplexity, then cold assurance. Garth handed the photograph to Joan Quarrier.

For an instant she examined the likeness, then with a note of triumph in her voice, returned it to Guthrie with: "It looks like him, but this man has no lobe on his left ear and his hair—look at the thin hair! His—our man's—is thick."

Guthrie nodded. "This is the man you are after, Farrel?"

"Yes, and he's the man in that room."

"You didn't tell me his real name."

"His real name is Carmichael—Jack Carmichael. You ought to know, major; he must have been a friend of yours to take the chances with the law that you have, in hiding him."

"All right," said Guthrie coldly, "any chances I took, I'll answer for. Now look at this photograph. You see that this man, besides losing half his face—poor devil—has no lobe on his left ear. That's clear, is it?"

"Yes, I noticed that."

"All right. Now look at his hair—is it thick or thin?"

"Thin."

"All right. Now in his description, what scars does he carry?"

Farrel read from the paper he took from the envelope in his pocket: "Scars: Little finger on right hand, missing; lobe of left ear, missing; etc.; shell wound on knee."

"Come in here. Taking a candle, Guthrie led the two policemen into the bedroom. "There's the little finger on both hands. Get that?" Joan heard Guthrie say. "Ears both whole, aren't they? See any scars on his knees?—No!"

"Now, Inspector Farrel, look at that head of hair! —Does that look thin to you?—No, quite the contrary, it couldn't be thicker. Now I'll ask you to notice this bayonet thrust. He got it in a raid in the Ypres salient.—That's what gave him his first V. C. I was with him. Has your man a slash across the collar bone like this? —No!—Are you satisfied, Farrel?

For a space, the trembling girl, thrilled—elated, listened for a reply. Then there came in the low voice of Farrel a reluctant "Yes."

The three men returned to the living room, victory in the eyes of the factor of Elkwan. After the toil, the anxiety, the despair, the memory of Craig Galbraith was clean of stain.

CHAPTER XV

"Etienne," said Guthrie to the half-breed, who lingered at the gun-rack in the room, knife still hanging from wrist thong, hostile eyes on the policemen, "you help Miss Quarrier and Old Anne, while I show these gentlemen their beds. I'll be back directly."

With a backward glance at Joan, Rawdon reluctantly followed the others from the house.

In the trade-room Guthrie told the story of Craig Galbraith.

"He made the trench raid a work of art, Farrel, V. C., Croix de Guerre, Legion of Honor, he had them all. There wasn't a Hun headquarters that didn't know his name. They offered a king's ransom for him dead or alive."

"They warned me at Moose that it would be suicide for us to go to that schooner," replied the older man.

"It would have been, Farrel."

"What was he doin' with the Lewis guns?"

"I don't know. Of course, I thought he was the man wanted and figured that he didn't intend to be taken. But he was weird with a pistol. He'd shoot with either hand, from any angle. And his strength—you saw him and can judge."

"Well," said Farrel with a sigh, "I'm glad it turned out as it did. If the description had tallied with him, you were in bad for concealing him from us, although I understand how you felt—in bad with your people, too."

"Yes," said Guthrie, quietly, "it took some hard thinking to decide what to do when you heard him break loose."

"What to do?" demanded Rawdon with a sneer. "What could you do?"

Guthrie's glance in the direction of the speaker brought the blood to Rawdon's face.

"Shoot you through the head, Rawdon, if I had been the only one involved—or rather, the ears, to insure getting your brain."

"You would—would you!" Purpling with rage, the policeman straightened to his feet. "You were trying to hide a crook from the officers of the law—or thought you were—"

With a crash Guthrie's chair hit the floor behind him. "Mention that man over there again—and you'll never leave—"

"Hold on here!" Roughly pushing his subordinate behind him, Farrel faced the man whose mouth curled in contempt of the patent fear in the eyes of the younger policeman. "I won't have a fight here, major! You're nervous—get yourself in hand!"

"It's all right, Farrel. He's safe enough here," said Guthrie quietly, "but he'll have to watch his step. Understand, Rawdon?"

Turning his back on the victim of his over-raw nerves, Garth threw back a good-night to Inspector Farrel and returned to the watchers.

CHAPTER XVI

What could be done, Etienne and Old Anne, under the dictions of the nurse, had done for the dead. In the morning, protected by a cache of logs, he would be buried in the snow until the spring would admit of the digging of a grave.

"You need air and change from this place." Garth said to Joan. "The stars are out; put on your coat and let's walk. I have much to say to you."

"It would be good. I think I'd like to walk on the river ice," she agreed. And with Shot as escort, they crossed the clearing.

"You never told me why you stayed at Albany," he began after a silence.

She did not meet his eyes, but looked far to the east where the moon, sliced in half, like a mammoth cheese, by the roof of Akimiski, bathed the indigo barrens with silver.

"Is it a secret?" he pressed.

"I was needed there."

"And now, because of my bringing you into this, you can't go back."

"They will gladly have me back—they need me."

"But so do I, Healer of Wounds, I need you. Won't you listen—believe what I say?" His voice broke with emotion he could not control.

She stopped.

"Please, I beg of you, never call me that again!"

"Why, I'm sorry—I didn't know," he faltered, puzzled by her mood. "It means so much to me—a badge of honor, an accolade."

"Yes, at first, but it has come to mean to me—" she checked herself.

He waited, watching the light touch her sober face.

"It has come to mean to me," she went on, "something humiliating—hateful."

"Why, my dear child!" he gasped in astonishment. "Humiliating? I'm proud—so proud, to love the woman who has been a healer of wounds."

"Oh, but you don't understand—can't see! And how am I to tell you?"

"If, after what we've been through together," he said passionately, "if, knowing that you are all my world—all I have left to cling to, to fight for, you can't be frank with me—"

"You tell me that you care for me," she broke in bitterly, "then why is she there—in your room, where you can see her?— If you've forgotten—as you say."

He raised his mitten to his forehead as if dazed, then turned a face tense with candor. "Is she still—there?"

"Still there? Don't you know that the three likenesses are in your room, now?"

He smiled as one smiles at the caprice of a child. "It is so long since I'd noticed them, I had forgotten." Then, dimly at first, in a moment he saw—"Healer of Wounds!" he murmured. "Oh, you think there's a scar, a wound unhealed—the memory of her, that I can't forget?" he cried. "Ethel! You think you're healing the wounds Ethel left—a substitute. Is that it?"

She would not meet his smiling eyes.

"Long before I met you," he went on, "she had become a shadow. I had come to see her as she was—the shallowness, the hardness of her. Then there came sailing across the strait a girl with eyes that never wavered—a heart all gold, and hair," he laughed at the anti-climax, "that the wind loved to play with. Like the soldier she was, she forgot self in the work at hand. With those clear eyes, saw the truth. And when I left her that night on the shore of the Albany—I loved her."

With a catch in the throat, Joan Quarrier lifted her face to the moonlight. The sensitive mouth quivered below clouded eyes, fiercely questioning.

"You cared for me, you say, but each morning you looked at the lovely creature you had lost—and felt—just a bit sorry for her, for yourself, eh, Major Guthrie?"

He hardly recognized the voice, so hoarse, so bitter was the note on which she finished.

Hopelessly he shook his head. As if to himself, he muttered in protest: "They were there with those of the family, untouched, because unthought of. I was away—hardly slept in the room after leaving you at Albany, up the coast, inland after Soucl, on the island. Do you think I would have turned to you in my need—asked you to come up here—with all it meant—if I had not loved you?" he pleaded.

But in her overmastering pride, Joan Quarrier was obdurate.

"Let us walk," she said, mechanically, and started on.

They walked a mile up the river trail, and turning, faced the pulsing aurora. The stinging air had lured the color to her cheeks, the shadows left her somber eyes. They vied in naming the colors in the intermittent glow of the northern lights, identified stars, for the moment forgot themselves in the stimulation of keen air and leaping pulses.

As they neared the post, her moccasin slipped on the ice-hard trail. With a swift movement he caught her, felt for an instant the weight of her in his arms, straightened, still holding her; then, as her hood fell back and he caught the fragrance of her hair—crushed his lips to it. Slowly her dark head turned, and there on the ice of the Elkwan, he held her, trembling, meeting his wild mood with a revelation of tenderness—of passion, unguessed.

"Why, oh, why," he asked, "did you torture me so long?"

"Because, Oh, Lord of Elkwan and half of Akimiski," she bantered, "you tortured me with those photographs."

"Do you believe—that I forgot their existence?"

"Yes—but oh, I couldn't be second best—her substitute. I wanted to be first—wanted to be everything to you—all. And yet you needed me so—I knew it that night at Albany."

"That I loved you?"

"No, stupid, that you needed me."

"And that is why you stayed at Albany—because you thought I needed you?"

"No, prince of blindmen, because I—loved you." And she tenderly kissed the cicatrix which crossed his cheek. "You made me love you the night you told me of the coming of Ninda, to Elkwan."

"And I made your brother hate me," he laughed.

"Have I atoned for his injuries to you?"

"I love him for those injuries. He didn't know how he helped. But you mustn't stand here in the cold with your hood off. You'll freeze your face!" Guthrie suddenly became serious.

"Not with you, hungry man!" she laughed.

"Good-night, oh much-needed lady," he said in the living room.

"Good-night, Sir Philip Sydney. All in a few hours I have seen your eyes cold as the ice out there—and I've seen them—well, as they look now, dearest man-with-the-scar," and she kissed him and went to her room.

The following morning, when the police dog-team had left for Seal cove, the nervous Ungavas led by the protesting Shot drew the rude coffin of Craig Galbraith to the post cemetery. There, beside the snow-drifted cross marking Ninda's grave, they built a cache of logs over the rough box of spruce slabs, and against it, rested the spruce cross which would be set in the spring when the frost left the ground.

As Garth and Etienne crossed to the trade-house, the half-breed stopped, shading his eyes with a mitten.

"See something?"

"Ah-hah!"

"Can't be the police team coming back?"

"No, eet ees long team—seex dog, I think"

"From Albany—a packet from Cameron. I wonder what's happened."

Twenty minutes later Guthrie was opening the mail bag which the dog driver from Albany had handed him.

"As soon as Etienne rounds to," wrote Cameron, "you bring Miss Joan down the coast—she's needed. The company is locating a permanent post on the island in the summer, and want you to handle it. You have made a big stroke with Moose and Montreal, and if you care to stay in the trade, ought to go far. I trust by now you are open to congratulations."

But the dispatch of the mail-team to Elkwan was due to the special orders from Montreal headquarters which accompanied a letter addressed in typewriting to Major Garth Guthrie. Curious of the reason prompting the unknown writer to the haste and expense of an express packet down the Missinaibi and up the coast in midwinter, Garth opened the letter in the handwriting of his brother, which ran:

"Dear Old Garth:

"If you will accept my deep apologies, I will be a happy man. I have learned that Quarrier had personal reasons for wishing to injure you. At the time I believed him—thought you had cut loose from us, were unfair to Ethel. But I have received a long letter from Fort Albany, from Quarrier's sister, which is corroborated by Cameron, the factor, which clears the situation. This Miss Quarrier seems to be a most unusual woman, and Clara—you know Clara—well, she has a surmise.

"The Hudson's Bay people have told me of your marked success this winter, for which my congratulations. A Guthrie has a nose for business. Best wishes, my boy, but if you will come back to us, greater opportunities await you here. By the way, you may be interested to hear that Ethel married Sir Hubert Quayle, president of the Quayle Mines, last week. Clara is furious. She sends her best love.

"Affectionately,

"CHARLES."

Hurrying to his quarters with Shot at his heels, Garth thrust the letter into Joan's hand. He watched her color deepen as her dark eyes lit with her joy for him.

"Oh, I'm so glad—so glad!" she cried. "They want you back, Garth, want you with them."

"Shall I take Ethel down now? They ought not to be in there—her photographs—a married woman," he teased.

She shrugged her shoulders. "They are decorative, and your walls are bare. Why not leave them there?"

"Bravo, Healer of Wounds! Spoken like a soldier," and he took her in his arms, as the letter fluttered, neglected, to the floor.

"Cameron writes they are sending me next year to take the new post on the island. Is it Montreal in the spring—or our honeymoon on Akimiski?"

She rose and went to his open arms. "The island—The Land across the Water—in sight of which I met that very black sheep, Garth Guthrie—let's spend the summer there, Mr. Exile—alone."

For a space man and girl stood, lost in their happiness, then a wistful whine, the protest of two hairy paws, in silent demurrer to his heartless exclusion, waked them.

On his hind feet, nose to her shoulder, she impulsively drew the dog to her. "What would this family be without our Shotty?" And Garth's long arms circled girl and airedale, the two living things he held most dear.

[THE END.]

The BABY

Why do so many, many babies of today escape all the little fretful spells and infantile ailments that used to worry mothers through the day, and keep them up half the night?

If you don't know the answer, you haven't discovered pure, harmless Castoria. It is sweet to the taste, and sweet in the little stomach. And its gentle influence seems felt all through the tiny system. Not even a distasteful dose of castor oil does so much good.

Fletcher's Castoria is purely vegetable, so you may give it freely, at first sign of colic; or constipation; or diarrhea. Or those many times when you just don't know what is the matter. For real sickness, call the doctor, always. At other times, a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria.

The doctor often tells you to do just that; and always says Fletcher's. Other preparations may be just as pure, just as free from dangerous drugs, but why experiment? Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold!

Turns Face Into Sound

In demonstrating his newly perfected phonovisor at the Model Engineers' exhibition at the Royal Horticultural hall, Westminster, London, Mr. J. C. Baird, the television expert, said the operation turned the face of anyone who was in front of his little machine into a sound.

Every face and object had its own sound, which could be recorded on the phonograph. By playing these sounds with the televisor they could be turned back into the original image.

By putting the image sounds onto a gramophone record as well as the sound of the person's voice they could see and hear the person at the same time.

SUCH IS LIFE---An Up-to-Date Boy

Here's How Much Man Can Lose of Himself

Kansas City, Mo.—A man may go usefully about his work minus a leg, an arm, an eye, his tonsils, appendix, gall bladder one kidney, part of his lungs and brain and as much as 12 feet of his intestines.

Dr. John F. Erdmann of New York is authority for the statement. He told the Interstate Post-Graduate Medical association here that the number of organs a human being can afford to lose to the knife is steadily increasing, owing to better methods of surgery and increased knowledge of the functions of organs.

Recent developments, he said were operations on the heart, the removal of entire lobes of the lung and the removal of the gall bladder.

Iceland to Celebrate

Reykjavik.—The oldest democratic parliament in the world is claimed for the althing, the parliament of Iceland, which in 1930 will celebrate its millenary.

It was in the year 930 that all the chief peasants and traders were called together to decide upon the new faith as against the pagan Wodan cult, with the result that Christianity was accepted by an overwhelming majority.

To celebrate the occasion a church will be built on the Thingvalla plain as well as a national theater in Reykjavik, the capital.

The althing has seen many changes in the 997 years of its existence, but it is considered that never at any time has it been more balanced than now.

The elections during the summer changed the situation completely, in asmuch as the Peasant party got 19 seats against 16 to the Conservatives, who were previously in power. As the allthing counts 42 seats, the victorious party, however, will have to co-operate with the five Social Democrats and the sole representative of the Independence party. The single Communist will be left alone to attack the new government from the left.

The new premier, Tryggvi Thorhallsson, was originally a country parson, and is now editor of the Timinn (the Times), the leading paper of Reykjavik. His government will have to face the problem of stabilizing the currency, of building water plants at the many and powerful waterfalls and of constructing railways and motor roads.

A point of special interest is the proposal to use for domestic and industrial purposes the warm water of the geysers, the many natural fountains where boiling water sponts as it does in Yellowstone park springs.

First-Class Jap Wedding Costs $35

Tokyo.—It costs the equivalent of $35 gold to be married in first-class style in any of the larger Shinto shrines in Tokyo, according to a scale of charges just made public.

The $35 ceremony includes the attendance of high priests, a clerical orchestra with flutes, cymbals and pipes like those used by Pan, and all possible trimmings. Second-class weddings cost $25, and so on down to weddings classed as "pine," "bamboo" and "plum," the plum style necessitating a shrine fee of $7.50.

In Tokyo, as elsewhere, it is not the initial cost but the upkeep that counts, and the groom of a first-class wedding may spend thousands of dollars upon the wedding reception and dinner and more thousands upon the gifts to guests.

Buys Twain's Letters; Bare Money Worries

New York.—An account of the emotion and struggles of Mark Twain when his million-dollar fortune was being swept away by the publishing house he had bought, was given by the author in a collection of letters purchased from a private estate by Aaron Mendoza, dealer in old books.

The letters revealed him as harassed, but kindly, honest far beyond his legal obligations, and writing to keep his mind off his troubles.

"I mean to ship 'Pud'nhead Wilson' to you," Twain wrote his publisher during one of the years of depression. "I am almost sorry it is finished. It was good entertainment to work at 't and kept my mind off other things."

Meek Answer That Left Him Reflecting

John and Mary, loving domestic couple, had been having a slight argument as to the tentative purchase of a new hat on the part of Mary.

Things were just a trifle unpleasant, and the atmosphere was chilly John began to have that guilty feeling and wished to change the subject. He took up the evening paper and read attentively for a few minutes. Then he thought to branch out in conversation.

"Well, I see by the paper that they are going to have a husband-calling contest up in Chicago." No reply.

"Well, now, I never heard of a husband-calling contest. I have heard of hog-calling contests. What's the difference?"

"I don't know as there is any," came the meek reply from the wife.

In the course of a little questioning Mrs. Coupe found that the episode in question was one of several times that Betty had "taken the air."

Played in Double Luck

Two occupants of an automobile that figured in a double accident narrowly escaped death in Middletown, N. Y. The automobile went over an embankment at the side of a railroad bridge, dropped fifty feet to the track below and landed right side up. The occupants, entirely unhurt, had just time to get out of the automobile before a train rounded a curve and demolished the car.

Keeping Up With the Joneses

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

FRANKLIN was seventeen when he first entered Philadelphia hungry and almost penniless. To the boatman who landed him at the market street wharf, he gave all the money he had in his possession and considerably more than the circumstances warranted, "a man being sometimes more generous," he explained, "when he has but a little money than when he has plenty, perhaps through fear of being thought to have but little."

Franklin lived very frugally after his marriage, for he was considerably in debt and he wanted very much to get on. For his breakfast he had only bread and milk, eaten from a cheap bowl with a pewter spoon. But they began to get on and to be ambitious, and Mrs. Franklin wanted to live in the same style as their more prosperous friends were living. So one morning at breakfast Franklin found his bread and milk in a china bowl, and a silver spoon was at hand with which it was to be eaten. On these his wife had expended more than a pound. It was the same social ambition as we see in people today, young and old, who want to keep up with their neighbors. They have little money, but they spend generously lest those who know them will think they have little.

The fraternity was planning its annual formal party and the subject uppermost was how much the function should cost. There was the decoration of the house to be considered, and the dinner and the favors and the sort of orchestra that should be engaged, and the "imports" and how they should be entertained for the week-end. It could all be done simply and yet in a dignified way or they could spread. To most of the fellows a little added expense did not mean any sacrifice, for each had a generous allowance which would easily take care of the cost. But there were a few fellows who were having a hard time to make ends meet and who could not expect to receive any further help from home.

"We ought to keep the party down to a reasonable cost," Johnson argued. "Welch and Arnold are working their way, and they can't afford anything extravagant."

Johnson had plenty of money; the extra cost meant nothing to him. There was a good deal of discussion, and the more sensible members were in favor of conservatism.

"Let's put it to a vote," Johnson suggested finally. But on the vote Welch and Arnold were in favor of the more pretentious function. They hadn't the slightest idea where the money would come from to meet the expense, but having little money they couldn't quite bring themselves to admit that they had little.

Gilman has a car—a very respectable-looking car which he and Mrs. Gilman have found adequate to their needs. In his circumstances it is about all he can afford; but the Joneses next door, who are in no better circumstances than Gilman, have an elegant new six-cylinder car which, parked in front of the Jones residence, high-hats the modest Gilman car.

The Gilmans are contemplating buying a new car.

Nation's Health Bill Totals $4,000,000,000

Minneapolis, Minn.—The nation's health bill is $4,000,000,000 — more money than the total cost of administering the United States government—the Co-operative Club of Minneapolis was told by Dr. John A. Hornsby, member of the University of Virginia School of Medicine.

Doctor Hornsby, while attending the convention of the American Hospital association, said this money is expended in connection with hospitals and sanatoriums, for drugs, health resorts and patent and quack medicines.

Pointing out that the $4,000,000,000 does not include athletics and recreation that had health for their object, Doctor Hornsby declared that probably the largest sum of money directed to any human activity is invested in health.

Retires in Glory

Few football coaches have ever closed their active careers on the gridiron with a better record than the one compiled by "Hurry-Up" Yost in his last year, 1926, at the University of Michigan. One defeat kept the 1926 Yost farewell from being a perfect one. That was a 10 to 0 setback at the hands of the Navy. But the seven fine victories that the team ran up took away all sting of the Navy defeat.

New Rochelle, N. Y.—Ignatius Collins was in court for running his car past a stop signal. "I have three good excuses," he told the judge. The excuses were triplets. Sentence was suspended.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

Bird Was First "Simpleton"

Once there was a bird so clumsy and slow that he was called "dodo," which means simpleton. The dodo resembled the swan but his legs and tail were very short, making him easily captured. The birds have now become extinct, but they were at one time very plentiful on the islands of Mauritius and Bourbon.

100th Anniversary of Sea Battle Observed

Navarino, Greece.—This little town, which is also listed in the Atlas under the name of "Pylos" and "Neokastro," recently was the spotlight of historical interest.

The occasion is the celebration of the centenary of the Battle of Navarino.

The bay of Navarino was the scene of two great naval battles, the first of which took place in the year 425 B. C., when the Athenians defeated the Spartans in an important sea fight.

The second battle, which is the one of which the anniversary was celebrated, occurred October 20, 1827, when the inhabitants of Navarino witnessed a monster naval combat during which the combined British, French and Russian fleets defeated and, in fact, completely annihilated, the Turks and the Egyptians under Ibrahim Pasha.

The recent celebration took place despite the opposition of the organizing committee who wished to have it postponed until the monument which was to have been dedicated to the memories of the three Christian commanders who defeated the Turks, Vice Admiral Sir Edward Codrington, for Great Britain; Rear Admiral de Rigny, for France, and Rear Admiral Heiden for Russia, was entirely completed.

Hence a rather unusual feature of the ceremony was the fact that instead of "unveiling" the monument, the officials present had to remain content with laying its foundation stone.

140,000,000 Blacks and 4,000,000 Whites in Africa

Sydney.—"There are 140,000,000 blacks and 4,000,000 whites in Africa, and it is only a matter of time until Africa will be ruled by the black man," declared Dr. H. E. Wareham, who has had 25 years of experience in missionary work in northern Rhodesia.

"Africans are not an inferior species of people," said Doctor Wareham, "and they cannot be kept permanently in subjection. But they need the guidance of the white man."

Invents New Alloy

Dresden.—An alloy resembling gold and declared to be just as durable, has been produced by a Bohemian inventor, Joseph Benovics, according to reports received here. The new metal composition looks like gold, of a rich yellow color, does not oxide and is much heavier than iron.

Expensive Obstinacy

Lewistown, Pa.—Having refused to pay a school tax of $5.25, Mrs. Lillian Reed of Milroy is in jail. It will cost much more than that for her to get out, such as $29.20 for court costs, $4.40 for a sheriff's fee and her own attorney's fee.

Winter Sports Coat

For the winter sports wear Miss Myrna Loy, movie actress, has selected a sports coat that is striking not because of the style, but because of the material of which it is made. The cloth is rodier cloth, striped in tan and wood shades. The large shawl collar, made of natural lynx is exactly suited to the color and material of the coat. A tan hat with a touch of brown velvet and a tan bag trimmed with snakeskin complete Miss Loy's smart outfit.

War Club Has History

New York.—The war club of an important Indian of the old Iroquois tribe is a new prize acquired from England by the Museum of American Indian, Heye Foundation, here. From marks on the weapon museum experts have been able to reconstruct a good deal of its past career, even though any records or stories attached to it have long since been lost.

The handle of the club is carved with the words "Oqdehtague ie cam ara de Jeanson" which, translated, means "Oqdehtague, the friend of Johnson," according to Arthur Woodward of the museum staff. On the other side of the handle is engraved the strange looking word "Warragh iyagey," which is the name the Iroquois gave to Sir William Johnson, the British superintendent of Indian affairs shortly before the American Revolution.

"The remainder of the cleared space on the handle is filled with a series of exploit marks," says Mr. Woodward. "There are war belts denoting the number of times the warrior had set out upon the war trail and the number of times he was wounded is shown. There is a rude carving of a full-length figure depicting on the body the tattoo marks worn by an old-time Iroquois fighting man. There are also figures repressting 13 men each carrying a gun."

The ancient weapon recalls that in 1758, during the French and Indian war, an Onondaga warrior was slain by the enemy and Sir William Johnson's secretary recorded his death. This Indian bore the name of Otquenandagehte, which very nearly approximates the name on the war club, and the knife carried by this Indian bore the same words, "friend of Johnson," that are found on the club.

"It would seem that the knife and club both belonged to the same man," Mr. Woodward says, "and that the club, being a well-executed piece of work and more important than the knife, was taken as spoils of war by the Indian or Frenchman who killed its owner. Later the club may have been captured by some British fighter, and so it found its way to England as a curiosity. It would seem that the club belonged to some important man of the Iroquois who stood in well with Sir William, then the autocrat of Indian affairs."

Many of the early colonists sent back to their homes in England, Holland, France, or Spain numbers of Indian "curios," he states. Today these souvenirs are among the most valuable of all American ethnological specimens, because they represent the culture of the American Indian at the time when he first came into contact with the old world civilization.

Hunt Alaskan Moose

Anchorage, Alaska.—Eleven parties of well-equipped hunters from many places in the world left here for the spruce and birch forests on Kenai peninsula where dwell the antlered monarchs of the silent bogans—moose. Calling or stalking in the moist, dark woods of the Far North, experienced and thoughtful guides are necessary for the wise old bulls of the muskegs offer hunters a master defense of caution, wariness, olfactory and auditory nerve action and fast foot work.

The inevitable call, answered by red-blooded men in early autumn, is each season leading them farther into the north wilderness, yet in spite of the continued hunting these huge animals with queer shovel-shaped antlers are surviving and increasing after a century of slaughter.

In Alaska is found the largest bulls of the species and in Kenai peninsula, about eighty miles northwest of here, a hunter is certain to obtain choice trophies. Moose have been increasing in other parts of Alaska also.

Last season the record antlers taken from Alaska had a 72-inch spread with perfect symmetry. Game wardens coming out of the moose country recently report more than 3,000 of the large animals in the Kenai. Food conditions there are ideal for moose. There birch and willow twigs grow profusely as well as alder and spruce. Grass and aquatic vegetable matter also offer good moose fodder.

Under the present efficient Alaskan game laws each hunter must take a licensed guide into the moose haunts and a good-sized tax is attached to the sportsman for the privilege of taking home the head and antlers.

To make a moose hunting trip into Alaska also offers hunters an opportunity of either bagging a gigantic brown or grizzly bear or being bagged by bruin.
